Third, That each member of the several societies contribute as a minimum at least one cent per day, throughout the next conventional year, and as much more as self-sacrifice, frugality, and diligence may increase our ability to give. That this be urged and encouraged by frequent missionary appeals, incited and augmented by maps, lectures of returned missionaries, safe literature, and other legitimate means calculated to accelerate and enlarge the work of missions.

That special diligence be made obligatory and binding upon all duly commissioned members of this Convention to do all in their power in prayer and effort during the ensuing year to make it the most prosperous and fruitful of any year in its history for the cause of missions.
